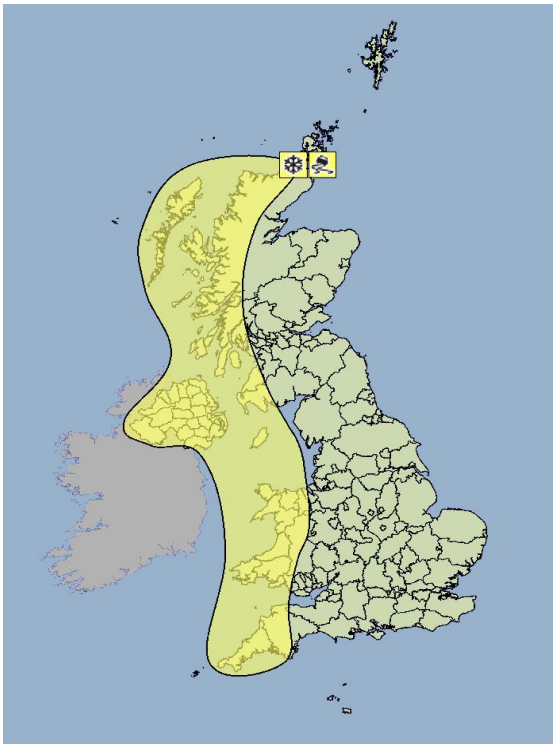
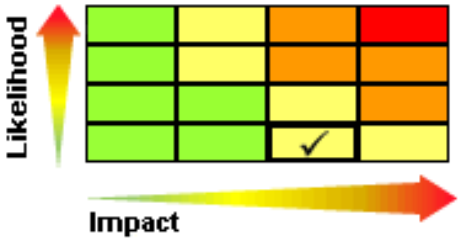
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Following a band of rain, sleet and snow, clearing southeastwards, rain, sleet and snow showers are likely to increasingly affect western parts of the UK. Snow showers are likely to be frequent in western Scotland and northern Northern Ireland, where hail and thunder are also possible. These will gradually fade overnight Tuesday into Wednesday, with icy stretches developing as skies clear, particularly where early snow has melted and then refrozen overnight.

0.5-3, locally 5 cm of snow is likely at low levels, with some places above 200 m seeing 7-10 cm. As is usually the case with showers, not everywhere within the warning area will see them, and along immediate coastal fringes exposed to the northwest, they may fall predominantly as rain.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow and Ice

Valid from 05:00 on Tue, 06th Feb 2018 until 09:00 on Wed, 07th Feb 2018

Snow showers are likely to affect the west of the UK, with icy stretches developing overnight.

Some transport disruption is possible, with longer journey times and delays to public transport. Icy patches are likely to develop on some untreated roads, pavements and cycle paths, leading to an increased risk of injury from slips, trips and falls.
